Scuba Diving: Sport or Leisure Activity?

But is it a sport if it's so much fun?

What's the difference between a sport and a leisure activity anyway and why does there have to be a distinction between the two?

The textbook distinction of sport and leisure is:

- Leisure is just playing for fun, even if it is a sport.
- A sport is something you want to be good or best at (competition)

Confused? Me too.

Leisure activities to me are those that are relaxing and easy. They bring joy and leave you in a glowing mood.

Is scuba diving joyful? Relaxing? Mood boosting? Check check and check!

Sports are more energy burning. They make you fitter and stronger with more endurance. Scuba diving does all of these things too. With time, practice and repetition you'll improve until you're a pro. However, there isn't a competitor element to scuba – so does this mean it is not a sport? Competitive scuba diving? I couldn't imagine anything worse. I don't even know what the scoring would entail if it did exist! Perhaps feet swam per 10 psi? How many clown fish you could count in 10 minutes? That sounds pretty silly to me.

In all seriousness though, a sport is something you can master. The PADI System is a tiered one, with each level having a way that you can improve and progress with the goal of becoming one of the elite divers. But what about scuba diving without labels? For those of us who just dive for fun and do not work in the diving industry? Is scuba diving a sport or a leisure activity? It's both, and let me tell you why.

The preparation can be heavy work. If you dive privately, without a dive center to help you, preparation can be a pretty good calorie burner. Lift, lug tanks from the filling station to your car, house and dive site etc will build your muscles. If it's a long or hard walk to your dive entry point you'll get some cardio too. Over time you will build up endurance and become fitter. The sheer amount of sweat you accumulate on a hot

Then once you enter the water it all changes. In calm water, where there is rarely a current and very little tide, scuba diving becomes a leisure activity. Think about it. Fluttering around with the slightest effort through a zero-gravity environment is soothing to the soul. It's relaxing and joyful and beautiful. It improves our mood. It's like our body knows it's made of 70% water and being underwater is like coming home.

Cypriot day alone should instantly qualify diving as a sport, because it is such a workout!

So, scuba diving is the best of both. It makes you strong, but happy. It makes you fit but relaxed. You're at one with nature, fully immersed and surrounded by it. You forget the troubles that may be worrying you and your office job may as well be on Mars because you are in another world. Each dive is leisure. Each dive is a workout. Each dive makes us thrive and it's the best activity in the world!

Aqualung presents us with the Helix Pro a mid-priced regulator, which enjoys very good performance, undoubtedly above expectations.

It represents the DNA of the Aqualung regulators. It is without Question the best option in terms of value for money currently available.

The Helix Pro version has two added features:

Aqualung's patented ACD system, technology that protects the first stage from accidental entry of water or dirt even when the regulator is not under pressure.

And sealed ambient pressure chamber, suitable for cold and/or polluted waters.

$699.00

The Apeks XTX50 Regulator is what you're looking for in a top of the line regulator, at a reasonable price. The Apeks XTX50 is designed to handle every diving condition you could put it through. It can even be changed from right hand to left hand use, by an authorized technician. You can change out the exhaust from a wide to a wider tee for minimal bubbles, great for photography, or a more narrow exhaust tee for a smaller more compact regulator. Apeks XTX50 features:

- An over balanced diaphragm design first stage that is environmentally sealed
- Four medium pressure ports, with optional fifth
- Easily converts from right hand to left hand, by factory authorized technician
- Pneumatically balanced second stage
- Diver changeable exhaust tee
- Nitrox compatible
